

Health and Safety legislation materialises through the work place in a number of ways:

- Through the appointment of Competent person

A competent person is appointment to help meet health and safety duties. To ensure that requirements of the Health & Safety Act are implemented and evidenced throughout an organisation

- Through a Health and safety policy

Which describes how health and safety will be managed & will let staff and others know about the commitment to health and safety.

- Through Using risk assessment as the main health and safety tool

To identify workplace hazards. It allows employers to put measures in place to control and minimise the hazards and risks they find.

- Through displaying the health and safety law poster

Employers must display the health and safety law poster, or provide each worker with a copy of the equivalent pocket card. They must display the poster where the workers can easily read it.

The poster outlines British health and safety laws and includes a straightforward list that tells workers what they and their employers need to do. It also add details any employee safety representatives or health and safety contacts

- Training and information

Every employee needs to know how to work safely and without risks to health.

- Consulting employees

Employers should find out what employees and their representatives think about any changes that might affect their health and safety and the quality of health and safety information and training
